Description

Jørn Sedgwick was born in Copenhagen and was brought up there by his grandparents. His mother Inger, the "Voice of Denmark" worked in London at Bush House and broadcast to Denmark under Nazi occupation. After the war Jørn settled in London and studied at Renshaw Street Polytechnic and Beckenham Schools of Art from 1948-1952. He taught in various colleges and art schools, including Central St Martin's and Croydon College of Art and Design. Later he left London to live in East Anglia. He exhibited widely including at the Royal Academy, Royal Society of British Artists and Young Contemporaries. This early work of the interior of his London studio in Harold Road, Crystal Palace, shows his strong interest in colour, which would eventually lead to the greater abstraction of his later work.
