Hartwell studied at the City and Guilds School in Kennington and the Royal Academy Schools. He also received private tuition from Edward Onslow Ford and Hamo Thornycroft and was therefore heavily influenced by the New Sculpture movement. He first exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1900, being elected an associate member in in 1915 and a full member in 1925. He lived in London and later in Aldwick, West Sussex.
His major public works include the St Marylebone Memorial, a large equestrian statue which stands in the St John's Wood roundabout near Lord's. His 1929 figure of The Goatherd's Daughter (also known as The Shepherdess) stands in Regent's Park and was erected by the National Council for Animal Welfare. His figures of Dawn and A Foul in the Giants' Race are in the collection of the Tate Gallery, London.
